"Since God so loved us, we also ought to love one another."

1 John 4:11

In our society, we tend to use the word "love" very loosely. We love ice cream. We love our pets. We love our parents, our spouses, our children. We love our new car or our favorite well-worn jeans. Surely we don't mean to attach the same value to our spouses or children as we do to ice cream or jeans. Yet what we mean can easily get lost if we do not have a standard for what love is.

The Oxford English Dictionary contains 25 entries for the word love. Many of those entries have multiple subsections. No wonder our society has a difficult time understanding love! We, however - as the body of Christ - have a very clear standard for defining love. "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believes on Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16) That standard of love, set by Almighty God and demonstrated in the flesh in Christ, is expanded and made even more clear in 1 John 4:11: "Since God so loved us, we also ought to love one another." The body of Christ is meant to be different from society. It is meant to be the hands and feet for the selfless, giving love - agape love - that Christ demonstrated on the cross.

Over the past month, the body of Christ - as individuals and as churches, locally, across the country, and throughout the world - has shown agape love in responding to the needs of the thousands of people suffering as a result of Hurricane Katrina. Those who are receiving food and medical attention and housing may never know who provided for their needs. Most of those who have responded will never be recognized individually. Their names and photographs won't be on the evening news or in the weekly news magazines. Yet they will have made a profound difference in the lives of hurting people.

On a smaller but no less significant scale, we in the Emmaus community have an opportunity to show agape love to the pilgrims who come to an Emmaus walk. The pilgrims may never know who made their beds or filled their glasses or wrote them letters. The names and faces of those who served in so many ways won't be on the evening news. Yet the community will have made a profound and eternal difference in the lives of the pilgrims. And that's better than ice cream any day!

Decolores,

Rosemary Blankenship

Community Lay Director

The Board met prior to the September gathering with 13 members present. Secretary Diana Shiflett submitted the minutes from the August meeting. The minutes were approved. Treasurer Monica Warne reported a checking account balance of $12,620.73 with $7,287.13 in operating funds. Monica also reported that she is finalizing contracts with Camp Happyland for the upcoming fall walks.

Richard Warner has arranged a visit to Camp Happyland for E-60 and E-61 weekend lay directors and cha coordinators to see several newly constructed dormitories that may be used on the fall walks.

Steve Makely and Richard Warner are working on an inventory of community-owned equipment. Steve and Lola McDonald, Community Music Director, are leading a committee to research and to make recommendation to the board for purchase of additional equipment for community use.

John Shutlock is working with several community members to update our Fredericksburg Emmaus website. One goal of this group is to make our community newsletter available in electronic format for those who prefer. This could save the community a considerable amount of money by reducing the number of newsletters mailed each month.

The Board finalized the gathering schedule for the remainder of 2005. The schedule appears in detail elsewhere in this newsletter. Please note that the November gathering is scheduled for the 3rd weekend to accommodate E-61 which is scheduled for the 2nd weekend of that month. Please also note that a DDU is scheduled for November. Pilgrims must attend a DDU before they can sponsor or team. If you have sponsored pilgrims who have not yet attended a DDU or if you are sponsoring pilgrims on the upcoming fall walks, mark your calendar now and plan to accompany your pilgrims to the DDU.

If you have questions or suggestions please do not hesitate to contact me or any member of the Board. I look forward to seeing you in October.

Dear Brothers & Sisters in Christ,

Summer vacation was the best when I was growing up. I could sleep late, ride my bike all day, and catch fireflies in the evening. I could stay up later and watch television without being asked by my Mom, "Have you done your homework?" Sporting a short sleeve tee shirt and shorts (shoes were optional), I lived the life of luxury as if I was on a Caribbean cruise.

Life was not all fun and games back then, however. I did have an afternoon paper route, grass to cut, and help my dad at his Service Station. On rainy days, I took my time delivering the fifty-seven "Richmond News Leader" newspapers to my customers, but on nice days, I raced to finish so I could spend the rest of the afternoon with my friends at the community pool.

One weekend, my cousin Larry and I were playing at my house. We were having such a great time, I asked my Mom if he could stay overnight. After checking with his Mom and my Dad, she agreed. We called it camping, but it was really a makeshift bed made up on the floor of our basement. There was a pool table and a Ping-Pong table in the basement, as well.

We were having a great time playing games, telling ghost stories, and listening to "Monkeys" records. My mom came down to check on us. She suggested that it was bed time, and we should turn out the lights. We did not put up a fuss, turned out the lights, and laid back with eyes wide open. We were both silent until Larry spoke up, "Are you sleepy?" "No, not at all! Are you sleepy?" I replied. My cousin let out a big sigh and said, "Well, what are we going to do now?" "I dun no, but whatever we do, we can't allow my parents to hear us." After a few minutes of silence, I mumbled, "It's hot in here.

I wish we could take a swim!" Larry eagerly replied, "Yeah, that would be swell!"

Instantly, we both sat up in bed, and stared wide-eyed at each other with sneaky grins on our faces. Without saying another word, we quietly changed into our clothes. We listened for a moment, as we slowly opened the basement door to the outdoors. Once we were in the backyard, we studied the window of my parent's bedroom. The lights were out, and no one was stirring. We turned and started an adventure of moving across town without being seen.

The small town was very quiet except for crickets, locusts, and a few dogs barking in the distance. We knew that we had to be very quiet as we walked in the shadows, down alleyways and backyards, stopping every few minutes to see if we were being followed or if house lights came on. There was a policeman on duty, so we had to stay off of the streets and sidewalks. If he were to spot us, he would surely wake up both of our parents, and we would be toast. Maybe he was taking a nap in the patrol car, with the two-way radio turned up loud enough to wake him if a call came in. He could be looking for us right now, because my parents must have awakened, checked on us, realized we were gone, and called the police. Dad would be angry, and mom would be crying. I would have to sleep on my stomach for weeks.

Minutes seemed like hours as we slowly walked down an alley, across yards, crossing a seemingly deserted street, finally reaching the railroad tracks behind the tobacco processing plant. We could travel faster once there, because there were no street lights. Passing behind the old town jail and under the Broad Street overpass, we never stopped looking over our shoulders.

The time came when we had to leave the tracks and cut across several more yards. All of a sudden, a car went by. It was the first one we had seen all night. "Oh no, a police car!" I whispered. We ducked behind a stack of bricks and watched until it had crossed the overpass and made a right turn. Relieved that we no longer had to hold our breath, we stood up, breathed deeply, and let out a little laugh.

Climbing a fence, we walked under a few trees, staying in the shadows. The smell of pine rosin filled our nostrils, and pine tags stuck to our feet. Larry stopped me, and said, "I hear something!" Looking around, I noticed everything seemed quiet. Maybe it was a false sense of security, but I pressed on. The next tree seemed to come alive as a white bulldog came out from behind, running, snarling, and growling. "Oh no, It's old man Murphy's dog!" I screamed to myself! We made an about face, and ran so fast we were able to jump the fence we had carefully climbed earlier. I could see the bulldog's teeth shining in the moonlight as we ran down the alley. House lights came on, a screen door squeaked, and old man Murphy shouted at his dog, "Leave those squirrels alone! Get over here and stop all of that racket!" Almost out of breath, but refusing to stop running until we were safe, we laughed as we slipped over a hedge. It had been twice that night that we had been given a reprieve. I hoped the prize was worth all that we had to endure that night.

Time came when we had to cross another main street. Looking both ways, we knew the coast was clear. The moonlit night seemed to be still again as we skipped across the road and passed by the old gymnasium. Our only obstacle was a tall wire fence that we had to scale. It was no match for us. We were over it in no time. Only seconds passed as we stripped down to our shorts, and jumped into the community swimming pool. There was no splashing around, no hand stands, or water games. We laid on our backs and soaked in the cool refreshing water as if we were two household sponges floating in mom's dish water. Unbelievable as it might seem, we were not disturbed. We enjoyed what we came for, and later slipped safely back through the night, back to my basement.

The bible tells me in Genesis 3:8 of Adam and Eve hiding from God: "Then the man and his wife heard the sound of the Lord God as he was walking in the garden in the cool of the day, and they hid from the Lord God among the trees of the garden." I believe God knew where they were all along, but he called out to them anyway. Adam and Eve had to learn to take responsibility and confess their sin.

The next day, after Larry had gone home and my paper route was done, I rode my bike home. I walked in the back door, said hello to mom, went into the living room, turned on the television and sat down. Mom came in, stood next to me, and stated, "I washed your wet shorts and hung them out to dry." At that moment, I knew my mom knew what I had done. She looked into my eyes, and I shared the story of the moonlight swim.

This was the only time I ever slipped out of my home at night without my parent's permission. Maybe it was the fear of being caught again, or knowing I had accomplished something without being caught right away. But the real reason was, I knew I had done something wrong. I had placed myself in danger, and it weighed heavily on my conscience. No matter where I go, I can not hide from God. To tell the truth, I like that He is always at my side.

I pray that if there is anyone out there that thinks they are hiding from God, be assured that God knows where you are. He is waiting for you to come to Him. His arms are opened wide, and forgiveness is a breath away.

Your Brother in Christ, Dennis Perkins

REAL HEROES - A DEVOTIONAL THOUGHT

Sometimes I enjoy watching a good sports event on TV. The Super Bowl is past history as are the Olympics. Many Americans have been and will be glued to their sets cheering for their team(s) and selecting their heroes to put on a special pedestal.

Sometimes I enjoy watching a good movie on TV (admittedly many are not worth watching). We all follow the drama closely hoping certain events will occur with the ending we desire. In the process we find heroes to "cheer" and villains to "dislike".

When I consider our heroes in sports and in the movies I have to stop and think more carefully. These people are paid a whole lot more than you and I. Some end up being poor role models. They became a hero because they can hit a ball, throw one through a hoop, run over a stripe on a field, or portray someone they aren't. In a sense they are all removed from the real "nitty gritty" of everyday life as you and I know it. We only see their public image, but don't really know who they are in their personal lives.

Perhaps we should look again. Maybe REAL HEROES are all around us, but we haven't seen them. The real hero is the mother (job outside the home or not) who takes care of her family in a hundred and one ways, works until late at night with household and children's activities, and then sits up with a sick child at three in the morning. The real hero is the World War II veteran who spent months away from his family either in the Pacific or Europe and literally went through "hell under bombardment" not knowing if he would live or die. The real hero is the person who goes about his job responsibly and faithfully for many years hoping to make a difference, but not knowing the big picture down the road. Come to think of it, real heroes are indeed all around us. One may be you whether you feel that way or not!

In fact we have many unsung heroes in the church. Your Sunday School teacher has to put in time in preparation and then smile for the class even when he or she is hurting on the inside: Our church leaders serve so faithfully without complaining. Maybe one of these could be our role model or hero?

The ultimate hero must be Jesus Christ. His character is something that all of us can look up to and try to copy. He was kind and loving to those in need yet very strong in facing the religious leaders of His day. He lived as an example to His disciples knowing that death on a cross was approaching.

In light of what I have written, I think I will re-examine who the REAL HEROES are amongst us!!

Gary Staddan
